

Sembrich and Caruso Charm in a Revival of Old "Lucia."

But There Were No Violent Outbreaks—A Present for the Prima Donna.

DEAR old Donnell, upon whom some of us were brought up and from whom a later generation of opera-goers has been educated away, got his innings at the Metropolitan Opera-House last night, when Mr. Comrie presented for the first time the season his "Lucia di Lammermoor."

client not set down in the book of the play. The members of the orchestra, who were particularly sympathetic to the artist, to reimburse them for their own part in the revival of the opera, presented the prima donna with a beautiful diamond necklace, which she wore with the moment of the evening that was live and true.

Ancona, at Eleventh Hour, Sings "Don Giovanni."

Italian Baritone Replaces Renaud, Whose Voice Is Still Laid by for Renaud.

It was Ancona, who sang the title role last night in Metart's old, never-broken "Don Giovanni," at the Manhattan. The Italian baritone took the part at the eleventh hour when it was finally decided that Renaud's hoarseness was still too severe to permit of his singing. Ancona showed no signs of insufficient preparation and gave a highly creditable performance.
